

De Gustibus Cooking School by Miele Debuts New Kitchen, Classroom, and Classes for 35th Anniversary

Check out the incredible winter lineup and sign up for a chance to cook alongside your favorite chefs inside the newly renovated De Gustibus Cooking School

December 4, 2014 | 04:48 PM | By Karen Lo, Editor

The new De Gustibus kitchen.

De Gustibus Cooking School

De Gustibus, New York City's longest-running recreational cooking school, has re-launched with a newly renovated classroom and kitchen, just in time for the school's 35th anniversary.

Located on the eighth floor of Macy's Herald Square, De Gustibus Cooking School by Miele has welcomed some of the world's most legendary culinary talents, including Julia Child, Jacques Pépin, Thomas Keller, and Daniel Boulud.

Just in time for the winter season, the school reopens with an impressive lineup: Chris Cipollone of the newly Michelin-starred Piora (December 1); followed by Gabrielle Hamilton of Prune (December 8); Michael Anthony of Gramercy Tavern benefitting God's Love We Deliver (December 11); James Kent and Mark Welker of The NoMad in a class to benefit nonprofit ment'or (December 16); Top Chef season 11 winner Nicholas Elmi of Laurel in Philadelphia (January 26); James Beard Award winner Jamie Bissonnette of Toro (February 4); and Matt Lambert of the Michelin-starred The Musket Room (February 9), among others.

RELATED ARTICLES

- LaVarenne Pratique: 11 Techniques from the Cooking School
- Cooking School Lessons To Make You a Better Home Cook
- Birra Moretti to Send Facebook User to Tuscan Cooking School
- Daniel Patterson and Gabrielle Hamilton Talk Food Writing
- VIDEO: Daniel Boulud and Cyril Lignac on Cooking Across Continents

Each class accommodates up to 60 guests and the newly designed kitchen provides the opportunity for hands-on classes with expert guidance.

"I am looking forward to our new season, and to continuing the tradition of showcasing rising star chefs, established talents in the culinary world, world-class sommeliers and authors to share their wisdom with our food and wine-loving students," said De Gustibus' owner and director, Salvatore Rizzo. "This season's lineup brings some of our most anticipated classes, and we are excited to welcome these new and returning chefs and guests."